

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. But when large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for the bottom line and less of what we need for our democracy. Instead of something produced at "News Central" far away, it's more important that we see real people from our own communities and more substantive news about issues that matter.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard.

My husband asked me..."now that the debates are over...what do you think will happen with the last of the campaign?".....I said" George Bush will come up with something really nasty or dirty...and that's the last thing you'll have to contend with".....well, guess that was prophetic...because sure enough...here come's Sinclair with this crap!

Thank you.....Diane Engelman for Integrity Again in the White House and a President and Vice President we can once again be proud of....John F. Kerry and John Edwards
